1 Aries 1

Boxes. They were everywhere. All of the human's toys had been hidden away, perhaps because Leo had played with them one too many times. The other cats didn't care. To them, it was a playground. Endless boxes to play in, push over, and hide inside.

But to Aries, it was a battleground. He would not let Leo push him off of a box, ever again! He had dignity. He was much better than that flea-ridden, show-off named-

"Leo!" Cancer hissed. Leo was climbing. He went up and up, to the tallest stack of boxes, until it almost looked like his fur brushed the ceiling.
"I'm the king of the world!" Leo said. Aries scoffed. Leo was too full of himself.

"Careful!" Cancer warned, her eyes wide with worry.

Leo rolled his eyes. "I'm not going to fall!" He assured her, sitting down with his bushy golden tail wrapped around his paws. "It's cool up here!"

"Oh, really?" Aries demanded. He hopped up on a box. "You think you're the only one who can climb, huh?"

Leo nodded confidently. "Careful, Aries, you might get a boo-boo!" He mocked. Aries flattened his ears and focused on climbing. He hooked his claws in the soft cardboard, pulling himself up, and up, and up...

He was almost at the top. Leo leaned over him, a smug look plastered on his face. As Aries got to the final box, Leo grabbed his paws and flung him off. Then Aries was falling, down, down, down...

Crash. He landed on a box. The top caved right in, sending Aries crashing into the contents inside.

"You saved our toys!" Cancer squealed. Aries shook his head, scrambling out of the box. Inside, the human had tucked some nice, human pelts that Cancer liked to sleep on.

Cancer dashed over and peered into the box. Then she sighed, "Oh. It's just pelts."

"It's fine. Human won't punish us with the toys in the box for long!" Leo promised.

As he spoke, the human appeared from upstairs. He stopped to pet Cancer for a moment, then grabbed Leo and lifted him off the box. He picked up the box that Aries had broken and carried it away.

"Hey, where are you going with that?" Aries demanded, following him. Human brought the box outside, ignoring him. The human didn't seem to understand talking. Simple creature.

Once the box was safely loaded in the monster, Human returned to get more boxes. "Our toys!" Aries cried, "Where are you going?"

"What a pitiful dumb creature." Leo meowed. "It doesn't understand anything!"

"Human is a he, not an it." Cancer corrected softly. "I'm sure he'll bring back some new toys for us, right, Aries?"

Aries snorted. "Sure."

Human came back, taking more boxes with him. He brought them back out to the monster and stuffed their toys away. He repeated the process several times, until Aries got bored of watching.

He padded away to find a good box to sleep on. He didn't mind the toys being boxed up anyway; he wasn't fond of toys. He preferred the outdoors, where he could run and be free without the human telling him what to do. He fell asleep, dreaming of being a wildcat.

2 Taurus 2

(My apologies for the lack of updates on this story!)

Rain battered on the windows, echoing around the dimly lit room. Taurus slept in the center, on a small bed that Human had generously left unboxed. She didn't really care about the toys being boxed up. All she really wanted to do was sleep, so what was the point? She did feel bad for the others, but if only they weren't so annoying...

Pisces jabbed her in the side with a paw. Taurus sat up instantly, groaning. "What do you want, Pisces?"

"Human took all of our toys." Pisces pointed out. "I need someone to play with!"

"Go play with Libra or something." Taurus growled. "Leave me alooone!"

"Don't you want to play?"

"Too tired." Taurus yawned. She padded out of what used to be the bedroom to where Human kept the food bowl. Upon seeing the empty bowl, she sat down and meowed loudly. This normally got Human's attention, but today, he didn't respond.

Taurus sighed dramatically and pulled herself to her feet again. She padded down the hallway to where the stack of boxes was highest. That was where Leo and Aries liked to hang out.

She gasped when she noticed that the boxes were gone. Human had cleared them all out! Would they take her bed next? Where were they all going? Why was Human taking them?!

Gemini was nearby, washing her fur. She looked up when she saw Taurus. "Oh, hey."

"What happened to the boxes?" Taurus cried.

"Human loaded them into his monster and left." Gemini shrugged. "He'll be back."

"Are you sure?"

"Course I am." Gemini laughed. "Human didn't take everything—you still have your bed, do you not? Surely he'll come back for us and the bed."

Taurus shook her head, not believing her friend. Gemini was usually very smart, but how could she believe that their human would really come back? It was very obvious that he had found a new home somewhere, perhaps with new cats. And he'd left Taurus and her friends behind!

"What did Aries say about it?" Taurus asked. Aries was a good leader; if they had to go to the wild, he would surely be the best choice in leader. Leo wanted to be leader, but he was all bark and no bite.

Gemini rolled her eyes, "Ask him!"

"Where is he?" Taurus felt uneasy. What if Human really had abandoned them? Where would they go? Where would they sleep– what would they eat?

"Dunno, probably somewhere by the door. He and Scorpio were talking about escaping." Gemini's eyes lit up, "Want me to come with you to look?"

Taurus nodded, "Please."

And so the two bounced happily towards the door, where they did, in fact, find Aries. His paw was wedged in the crack under the door, and he was trying his best to pull the door open.

He looked up when they saw him, "There's some weird mechanism holding the doors shut. We need– we need something to break the glass in the window, then we could break free."

"Don't be making escape plans yet." Gemini warned, "Human is almost definitely coming back." But even as she said it, she sounded unsure. Aries ignored her warning and continued to tug at the door. Taurus turned away, her stomach churning. They were trapped inside, and Human wasn't coming back.

3 Gemini 3

Gemini left Aries and Taurus by the door, still trying to pry it open. She wasn't as sure as they were that Human was gone for good. They must just be jumping to conclusions. Sure, Human was never the best owner, but he would never abandon his pets. At least, that was what Gemini kept telling herself.

She found Leo and Cancer napping together on the bed that Human had generously left behind. She nudged them both awake, "Hey, guys, wake up!"

"What is it?" Leo groaned. Cancer jumped up excitedly.

"I heard Aries was trying to escape! Did he get the door open?" She asked. Gemini shook her head, disappointed that even Cancer believed Aries' story. It didn't make sense. Why would Human just leave and not come back?

"No, but– you.. You really believe that we should escape?" Gemini asked anxiously. "It just doesn't make sense, does it?"

"What other reason could there be?" Leo asked. "I think, yeah, Human did leave us. It's not the end of the world! We can go exploring for the first time ever."

Gemini groaned at the idea. Though none of them were related, Gemini and her friends had all lived with their human since they were kittens. Since they could walk, they were always talking about exploring. What was just simple daydreams had become a goal for the cats recently.

"Is there any cat that agrees that this is a bad idea?" Gemini asked.

"Um, Libra. And Pisces, and I'm not sure about Capricorn." Cancer said.

"Libra just agrees with everything that Gemini says." Leo pointed out.

Gemini scoffed, "Not true!"

"Too true." Leo snickered, "And Pisces is just a big baby who is scared by the idea of going outside."

"Idiot." Gemini growled at Leo. She didn't know how any of the other cats could stand him; he was obnoxious! He always thought that he was right and that anyone who disagrees with him is just an idiot.

She stomped away, determined to find Libra or Pisces. She later found them both, sitting side by side. Libra was sleeping while Pisces was playing with his tail, clearly bored.

"Hey guys." Gemini greeted them. Libra opened his eyes, blinking sleepily.

He sat up, "Hey, Gemini. What's up?"

"I was talking with Leo about how stupid Aries' idea is. You know, like, how everyone thinks that Human abandoned us. He uh, said that you guys agreed that it was dumb."

"It's not a dumb idea." Pisces shrugged, "I just think it isn't true."

"Me too. But everyone besides us three agrees that it's the truth, and I don't want our group to split up. If Aries gets the door open and everyone leaves, I'm going with them."

"Me too." Gemini said, looking down at her paws. "But I won't be happy about it."

"Neither will I." Pisces agreed, "But maybe if we leave we'll find a new owner somewhere."

"Let's hope that's the case." Libra sighed. "I hate the idea of becoming a wild cat."

"Look out!" Aries suddenly growled from the direction of the door. Gemini whipped around to see the white tom racing towards the glass door. With a deafening noise, he crashed into it, sending glass flying in all directions. The door shattered.

"An idiot!" Libra exclaimed, "Aries, you are a massive idiot!"

"I uh, I did it!" Aries staggered away from the door, bleeding from several small cuts caused by the glass. He limped towards Leo, who was standing nearby with a look of terror plastered on his face.

"Aries, you could have killed yourself!" Leo gasped, his eyes wide.

"I didn't." Aries shrugged, "And now we can escape the house!"
